

Reciprocity and Community in Andean Political Thought: From the Revista Amauta to Sumak Kawsay

Coffee Talk: Tuesday, April 26, 1 pm

Complimentary with Museum admission

Nasca, South Coast, Peru, Bowl, 1-700, pottery and slip paint, 3 5/8 x 5 in. (9.2 x 12.7 cm) Gift of Mrs. John L. Hawkes 59.001.000

Moche, North Coast, Peru, Strap Handle Bottle, 100-800 BCE, pottery and slip paint, 8 1/4 x 4 1/2 in. (20.6 x 11.4 cm). Gift of Albert Gildred 76.003.002

Dr. Tracy Devine Guzmán, Department of Modern Languages and Literature, University of Miami, examines how the Andean notion of reciprocity has been appropriated by diverse intellectual, cultural, and political interests since the early 20th century. Beginning with the Revista Amauta (a vanguard publication founded by José Carlos Mariátegui), and ending with the Sumak Kawsay (“living well”) movement, I discuss how the subsumption of indigenous concepts into dominant social and economic paradigms has worked to counter or support widespread and influential constructions of national community.